

Unit 67 - Heather

Interviewer: Hi. What's your name?

Heather: Heather.

Interviewer: And where do you live?

Heather: I live in Washington state.

Interviewer: And what the heck are you doing here?

Heather: I go to college in Idaho, and one of my friends worked here last summer, and she got married this summer, so I came out here instead.

Interviewer: Ah hah. And, um, what are you taking up in school?

Heather: I'm a mass communications major with an emphasis in narrative and documentary film.

Interviewer: And when you get out of school, with, I guess, an undergraduate degree,

Heather: Hm hmm (yes).

Interviewer: uh, what, where, what's your first job? What do you want to do?

Heather: I want to make documentary films on human rights issues.

Interviewer: And do you already have some ideas about, uh, where you would go, and what to shoot, and that kind of thing?

Heather: I do, yeah.

Interviewer: Well, share. Can you share?

Heather: Sure.

Interviewer: Okay.

Heather: Uhm, I want to make a film on, uh, the child sex slave issue in Southeast Asia, and how, uhm, there's money laundering going on with it, uh, because of it, and uh, how Japanese businessmen get tourists to go. It's, uhm, a big problem, and woman's rights in the Middle East

Interviewer: Where, where, us, is your home town?

Heather: Uh, Wenatchee, Washington.

Interviewer: Menatchee?

Heather: Wenatchee.

Interviewer: Wenatchee. And what's the difference between Wenatchee and Nantucket?

Heather: Oh boy! Uhm, well, Wenatchee is the geographical center of Washington state, so I'm surrounded by the Cascade Mountains. We're right at the base of the Cascade Mountains, so not, not a lot of water, unless you drive for a couple of hours, and, uhm, it's uh, not chilly like it is here at the moment. It's about 100° (a hundred degrees) right there, so, right now, so yeah.

Interviewer: Big.

Heather: A little, little bit of a difference.

Interviewer: Big difference. – If you were to get $10,000,000 (ten million bucks) tomorrow,

Heather: Hm hmm (yes).

Interviewer: what would you do with the ten million bucks?

Heather: I would use it to make my movies.

Interviewer: You wouldn't put it in the bank, and Heather: No.

Interviewer: start a family?

Heather: No, no, no.

Interviewer: Build a house?

Heather: No, no, no.

Interviewer: Videos. Make movies. All right. Make movies. Okay. We're making movies now! Thank you, sweetie.
